

Race, Inequality, and Language in Education (RILE) Conference

October 28-29, 2016

Graduate School of Education at Stanford University

CALL FOR POSTER PROPOSALS

Submission Deadline: Friday, October 7, 2016 (5 pm PDT)

The first ever Race, Inequality, and Language in Education (RILE) Conference will focus on concerns about ideas of race, and how it is often used as a mask for discussions of poverty. It also seeks to highlight how scholarship about the impact of poverty often pretends that racism has no bearing on the social construction of impoverished spaces. RILE examines how these issues intersect.

A primary goal of this conference is to bring together scholars from the GSE and other institutions in the California Bay Area who focus their research in the areas of race, language, culture, and inequality. In particular, we will focus on understanding theories of race, and will also explore methods for studying the impact of race. Ultimately, our overarching goal is to have the Bay Area become the prototype for how to coalesce universities to better understand these complex issues.

The Faculty Director for RILE, Dr. Arnetha Ball, LEEP (Language, Equity and Education Policy) student group, and the RILE research conference graduate student committee, would like to invite graduate students to present their research during this conference.
