Teaching for Equity Learning Series

The Teaching for Equity Learning Series is an opportunity to learn from researchers and practitioners who will provide insight on teaching for equity. Each month you will have the opportunity to engage with a speaker, panel, or workshop around various topics in education. This is a great opportunity to blend research and practice! All STEP students and affiliates are welcome to attend any or all of these sessions.

Thursday, October 30, 2014 @ 6:30pm CERAS 101
Race, Inequality and Language in Education ● Speaker
Associate Professor in the Graduate School of Education, Bryan Brown’s research explores the relationship between student identity, discourse, classroom culture, and academic achievement.

Thursday, November 20, 2014 @ 6:30pm CERAS 300
Education and Equity ● Workshops
Engage with researchers and experienced practitioners around the topics of education and equity. Conference-style workshops will provide opportunities to explore specific topics of interest and consider important connections between equity-based research and practice.

Thursday, December 4, 2014 @ 6:30pm CERAS 101
LGBTQ Educators ● Panel Discussion
Hear from a panel of LGBTQ educators about negotiating identity and supporting students in K-12 spaces.

REFRESHMENTS WILL BE SERVED
EVENTS BEGIN PROMPTLY AT 6:30PM
Sponsored by: Stanford Teacher Education Program
Shayna Sullivan ● shaynas@stanford.edu
Thursday, February 4, 2016
@ 6:30pm in CERAS 101

RECOGNIZING (AND NOT RECOGNIZING) THE RICHNESS OF STUDENTS’ MULTILINGUAL REPERTOIRES

Ramón Antonio Martínez is an assistant professor in the Graduate School of Education and the Center for Comparative Studies in Race and Ethnicity at Stanford University. His research explores the intersections of language, race, and ideology in the public schooling experiences of students of color, with a particular focus on bi/multilingual Chicana/o and Latina/o children and youth. Before entering academia, Dr. Martínez was an elementary school teacher in the Los Angeles Unified School District.

Thursday, March 3, 2016
@ 6:30pm in CERAS 300

EDUCATION & EQUITY WORKSHOPS

Engage with researchers and experienced practitioners around the topics of education and equity. Conference-style workshops will provide opportunities to explore specific topics of interest and consider important connections between equity-based research and practice.

SAMPLE WORKSHOP TOPICS:

Code-switching, media representations of minority students, and more to be announced